FUND MANAGER COMMENT

Market Overview

- Markets spent the month dominated by concerns over macro issues. Fears of a slowdown following a series of softer economic reports, coupled with worries over a Greek default, led to risk assets selling off and money moving into the safe haven of government debt. The final week of June however, saw a reversal of this trend with global markets rallying sharply and bonds selling off, prompted by the Greek Parliament passing the vote to push through a future austerity package.
- A continuation of softening economic data lead the IEA (International Energy Agency) to release some of its reserves in an attempt to take pressure off supplies and bring down oil prices. Elsewhere consumer sentiment fell across Europe and the USA as pressure on household income and stagnant employment data undermined confidence. Towards the end of the month better news came in the form of US manufacturing and purchasing managers indices, both of which came in some way above expectations. We also saw positive comment from a number of large Japanese companies suggesting the disruption to supply, caused by the tsunami, is likely to fade much more quickly than previously expected.
- Within the funds many of our strategies rallied sharply towards the end of the month, leading to performance largely in line with the sector benchmarks.

Outlook

- 2011 is shaping up to look very similar to 2010 as investors seesaw between confidence and risk aversion. Whilst the potential for upsets remain, particularly surrounding further problems over sovereign debt issues within the Euro zone economies, we remain cautiously optimistic. Valuations continue to look inexpensive, the worst of the supply shock in Japan appears to be over, corporate earnings numbers should remain robust and tentative signs economic data is improving are beginning to appear.
