FUND MANAGER COMMENT

Market Overview

- Europe continues to dominate sentiment and investors remain desperate for a medium term resolution to the problems. The possibility of a eurozone break up was increasingly discussed as the need for austerity, reduced government spending and the impact of this on the local economies highlighted the potential for peripheral Europe to enter a downward spiral, resulting in one or more countries being declared bust.
- The negative sentiment from Europe drove markets downwards however things turned dramatically at the end of the month as six of the largest Central Banks announced a co-ordinated move to boost liquidity. Growing fears that liquidity issues were creating the downward pressure in the Eurozone encouraged the Central Banks to cut the cost of emergency loans to lenders by 50 basis points. European politicians need to provide further support with the forthcoming summit expected to provide clarity.
- Sentiment was also aided by news that the Chinese authorities had cut the reserve requirement for its lenders, supporting small businesses, and that a soft landing with continued growth is the most probable outlook. The US made a number of announcements on economic data which beat expectations and may be the initial indications of emergence from recession; most encouraging were data on housing starts and the employment figures. Whilst it is early days, stronger than expected growth from the US may be positive stimulus for the wider global economy and see the US re-emerge at least for now as the driver of recovery within developed markets.

Outlook

- Whilst the most recent data has been positive the underlying debt problems remain and hence further volatility should be anticipated. Emerging markets remain at the forefront for global growth, with inflation coming off and rate cuts expected this current volatility may well prove to be the buying opportunity. We will continue to seek benefits from Emerging markets within a diversified portfolio.
